

Captions :

Lea and Sudkiya

by Tomer APPELBAUM / baubau
2005 / 2007 – Budrus, Cisjordanie

Photo 01 -

Laila Mosenson shouts at an Israeli Border policeman holding his weapon in her direction. The policemen confront Israeli and Palestinian protestors during the weekly protest against the Israeli barrier in the West bank village of Bilin on Friday, February 21, 2005..

Photo 02 -

Lea Mosenson (left) with her friend Sudkiya Awad (right) in the court of Sudkiya's house, in Budrus, a Palestinian village in the west bank. They met 5 years ago, Sudkiya is married to Ahmed since the age of 16 and has 15 children. Layla is a single, and doesn't see her own family since the age of 17. She consider herself as a member of the Awad family. October 12, 2006

Photo 03 -

Laila Mosenson (mt), watches TV, surrounded with Sudkiya's children, in the Awad family house, in Budrus. Layla is considered as a family member. She said the heat of the Awad family made her much more stronger than before. She covers her head when she visit them by respect for the religious believing of her friend Sudkiya. 21 April 2006

Photo 04 -

Lea Mosenson (on the left), with five of Sudkiya's daughters, in the Awad family house, in Budrus. Layla is considered as a family member. She said the heat of the Awad family made her much more stronger than before, she covers her head when she visit them by respect for the religious believing of her friend Sudkiya.

Photo 05 -

Young Israeli and international peace activists participating at a bio-intensive agriculture work-shop for peace organized by Israeli activists. Since the House for Peace has been closed for moral religious reasons, the Awad family gave a plot of land belonging to Sudkiya's sister, in order to continue "work-shops for peace".

Photo 06 -

Young Israeli peace activists participating at a bio-intensive agriculture work-shop for peace, organized by Israeli activists. The women participating to the work-shop come with modest clothes, like covering their head and wearing long shirts, to respect the religious principles of the place. Friday, 21 April, 2006.

Photo 07 -

A young member of the looks as Israeli peace activists participate in a bio-intensive agriculture work-shop for peace. Since the House for Peace has been closed for moral religious reasons, the Awad family gave a plot of land belonging to Sudkiya's sister, in order to continue "work-shops for peace".

Photo 08 -

Haim, he is an Israeli PhD student in agriculture, explains methods to a group of Palestinian. Israeli and international peace activists participate in a bio-intensive agriculture work-shop for peace, organized by Israeli activists.

Photo 09 -

Lea Mosenson (left), and Lina Awad (right), preparing the lunch for the volunteers participating to a bio-intensive agriculture work-shop for peace. Since the House for Peace has been closed for moral religious reasons, the Awad family gave a plot of land belonging to Sudkiya's sister, in order to continue some "work-shops for peace".

Photo 10 -

The volunteers drink tea together during the lunch break of the bio-intensive agriculture technique work-shop for peace. Haim Levy, sitting on the right side, is the lector of the workshop, he is an Israeli PhD student in agriculture. The bio-intensive agriculture makes it possible to cultivate a maximum of vegetables on a small plot of land.

Photo 11 -

A young member of the Awad family takes part in a young Israeli peace activists bio-intensive agriculture work-shop for peace , organized by Israeli activists. Since the House for Peace has been closed for moral religious reasons, the Awad family gave a plot of land belonging to Sudkiya's sister, in order to continue "work-shops for peace".

Photo 12 -

Uri, a young Israeli man participating at a work-shop for peace about bio-intensive agriculture, in Budrus. Uri is also an activist from a left Israeli politic group called "Anarchists Against the Separation Barrier".

Photo 13 -

Ahmed Awad, and three of his daughters and Lea on the first plan, on the second plan, the Israeli volunteers participating at the work-shop. Ahmed is Sudkiya's husband, they know each other since they are child and get married at 16.

Photo 14 -

Sudkiya Awad, in the court of her house, in Budrus, a Palestinian village of the west bank. The photo has been taken one day before Layla went in jail, for 2 months. She told us at this moment "To be deprive of Layla will be like being deprived of food" . October 12, 2006

Photo 15 -

Ahmed Awad, Sudkiya's husband, has been wounded in the back by the Israeli army and cannot work any more. 19 persons live in his house : his wife, his 15 children, Sukiya's mother and his brother.

Photo 16 -

Lea Mosenson, in the court of Sudkiya's house, in Budrus, a Palestinian village of the west Bank. The photo has been taken one day before Layla went to jail, for 2 months. Layla has 11 complains from the Israelian justice, 7 have been cancelled but she still has to carry out a prison sentence. October 12 2006. She will enter in the Newe Tirtsa jail, near Tel-Aviv.